

Nurdles, plastic production pellets

© Paul Nettles

Plastic bottle factory

© SVTeam

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency

Using a plastic bottle

© BigKhem

Buying bottled water

© John Jewell

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency

© Envoy

plastic bottles

plastic
bottles

Plastic recycling bin

© CC0PublicDomain

When greenhouse gases are realised into the environment they can cause climate change, making the planet hotter

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency

© Hanno Langenhoven

Nurdles and other plastics can be found on every beach in the world.

© PevenseyBayLife

Some people drop their litter on the floor instead of putting it in the bin.

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency

© Tavish Campbell

Nurdles can be eaten by animals, this can make them sick.

© Roshan Nebhrajani

Storm drains all lead to rivers which lead to the ocean.

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency

Plastic from land can end up in rivers, all rivers lead to the ocean.

Plastic can cause harm to animals in the ocean.

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency

© AsaseAfrica

Some plastic that is too dirty to be recycled goes to landfill sites.

© ABCau

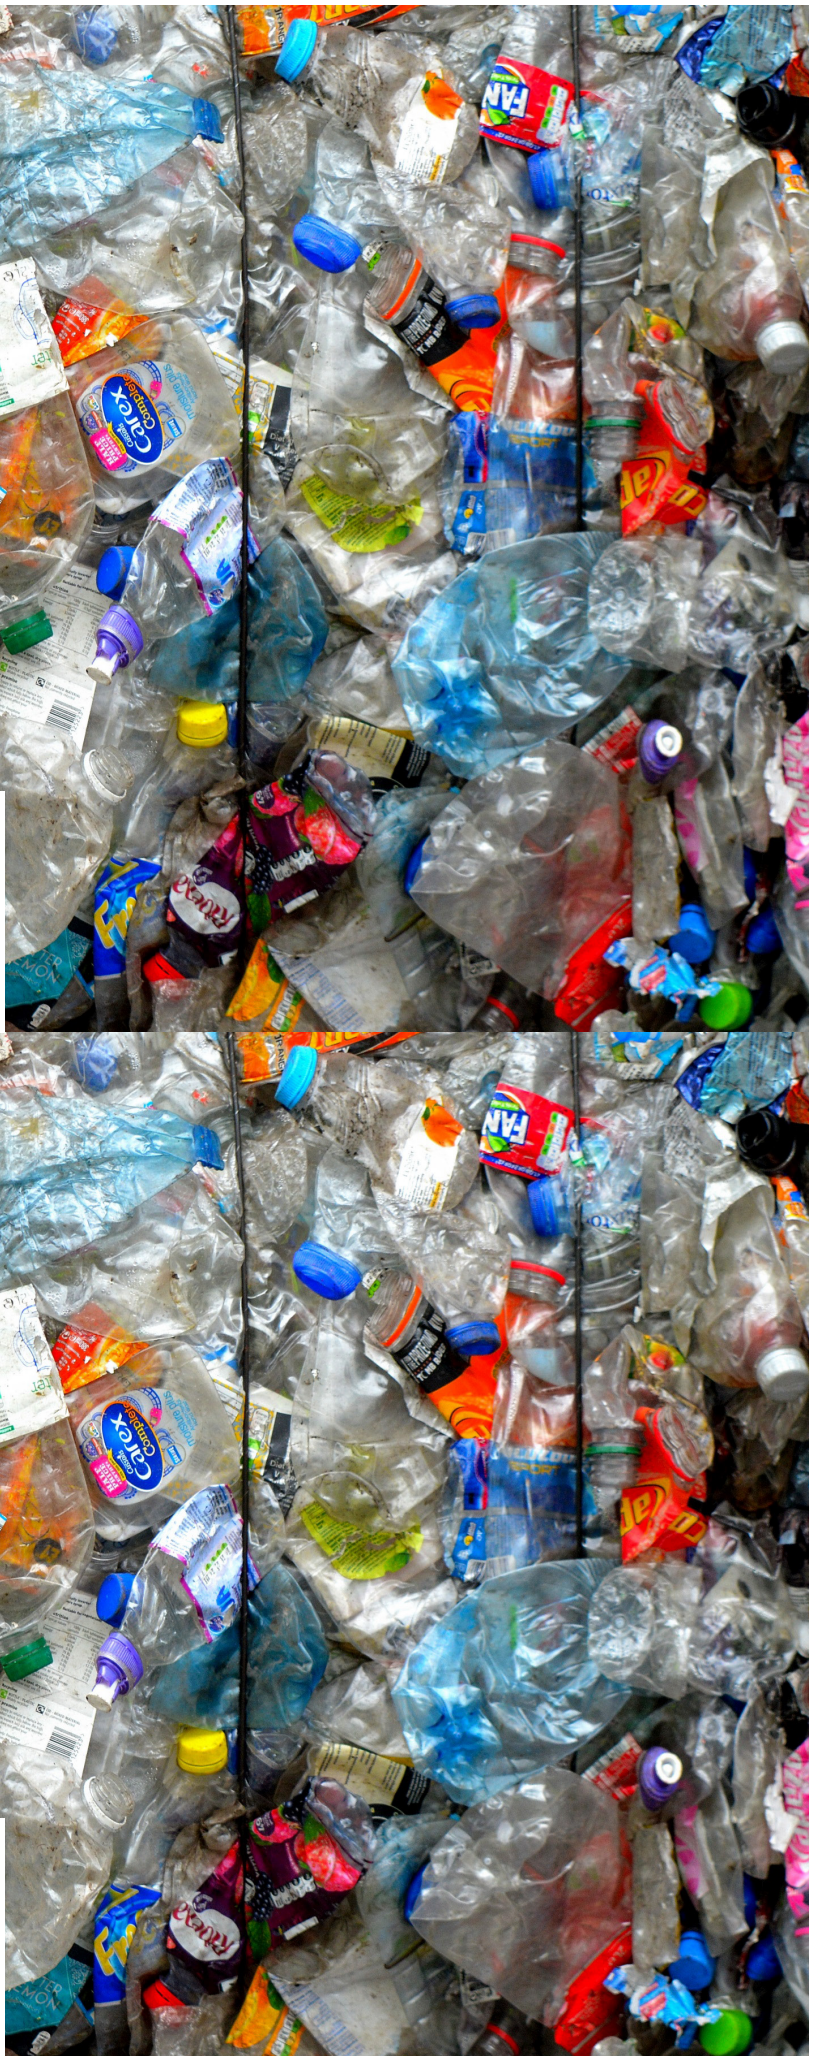

Containers can fall off ships when the sea gets rough.

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency

Transportation

Shipping

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency

Disposal

Purchasing

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency

Sea becomes rough

Recycling

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency

Cause a danger to marine life

Nurdles spill

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency

Rain or wind

Littering

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency

Travel to the ocean

Washed into rivers

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency

Contaminated recycling

Environment
Agency

Environment
Agency